OPA Policies Are Threat To Reconversion

Peril To Peace Jobs And Prosperity Is Seen— Fair Prices Are Sought

By JAMES PRESTON

Washington, D. C., Sept. 6 — Small-town-in-Ohio-born Robert R. Wason, who started his career as a brisk young newspaper reporter and then forsook deadlines for the wider fields of advertising and sales, has been preaching a down-to-earth business gospel in confused postwar Washington.

As president of Manning, Maxwell and Moore incorporation, which supplies equipment to substantially every important industry in the United States, and as chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers' Reconversion Council, he speaks from wide experience and sound judgment when he says:

"OPA pricing policies threaten to hold up reconversion, cause widespread unemployment and present a formidable obstacle to attainment of postwar prosperity.

Fair Prices Important

"Large volume production, with consequent large volume of employment, can only be attained under fair prices which yield fair incentive profits.

"Unrealistic low prices will discourage production and result in serious unemployment."

Studious, middle-aged Mr. Wason, whose selling activities have covered practically every state, holds that business must have fair incentive prices based upon "a realistic acceptance of all current costs, plus the profit margin experienced under highly competitive conditions in prewar."

Such pricing policies, he points out, are also vitally important to the millions who look to business for their peacetime jobs.

WASHINGTON SNAPSHOTS

BY JAMES PRESTON

Energetic John W. Snyder, 49-year-old new head of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion and close friend of President Truman, is frankly concerned over what remains to be done to smooth the paths of farmers, manufacturers, merchandisers and workers during reconversion.

A cheerful, solid Midwesterner, experienced in banking, Mr. Snyder regards rapid return to volume production of civilian goods as the best possible way to avoid inflation, as well as deflation and unemployment.

A retailer after World War I, Mr. Snyder learned small business. Banker in Arkansas and Missouri, he learned sound finance. Liquidator of national banks for the U. S. Comptroller of Currency, 1930-36, he witnessed the tragedy of depression bank failures.

With authority to tell OPA what to do about reconversion pricing and WPB how to handle civilian production, he is acutely aware that, with Japan collapsing suddenly, causing a slash in munitions production, a large number of men must find or change to new jobs. Washington observers are confident he will use all his authority to clear the way for quick reconversion.

A man who makes quick decisions and sees them put into action, Arkansas-born Snyder faces a hard task. His pet hobbies, collecting various issues of the U. S. dime, and pictures of airplanes, will get little attention for some months!

Polls Open For Registration In School District Election

Only Those Registered May Vote At The Special Election To Be Held September 25

Citizens of local communities are urged to register for the election on September 25 to decide whether or not schools in the Cone mill area shall be taken into the Greater Greensboro school district.

Polling places, which will be open for next two Saturdays, tomorrow and September 15, are at White Oak Department store, Revolution Drug store, Proximity Y.M.C.A. and Edgeville school building. They will be open between 9:00 a.m. and sundown.

On July 17 the board of education of the Greater Greensboro school district, after receiving petitions signed by 820 residents of Proximity, Edgeville and Ceasar Cone school areas, voted to seek an election on the plan to merge the three schools with the city system. Petitions had been circulated by members of the Parent-Teacher association.

Recently a number of patrons of the schools have expressed the wish that the Cone Mill Schools and the Edgeville School should be a part of the Greater Greensboro School District system, and have sought by tuition payment to secure the opportunities of the Greensboro Senior High School.

In recent times the discrepancy has been used as a political issue, and on February 26, 1945, the Cone Mill Officers and Owners requested that the necessary action be taken by the Board of Education of the Greater Greensboro School District to relieve them from performing further educational functions, and provide for their employees the privileges of city operated schools.

The Board of Education of the Greater Greensboro School District has acted favorably upon that request and is of the opinion that such consolidation would be advantageous. Among other things it would permit attendance at the Greensboro Senior High School without tuition payment.

It will be necessary for a special election with special registration to be held at which time a majority of the registered voters of the district must vote for an assumption of the same supplementary tax levy as is levied upon property owners who reside in the existing Greater Greensboro School District. At the present time there are four levies; namely, Supplement 15c,

Right To Job Is Endorsed By Head Of Manufacturers

"Full Employment Plus" Program Is Offered For The Murray Bill

Declaring that the nation's manufacturers believe "unequivocally" in the right to a job, Ira Mosher, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, has presented to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee a program of "full employment plus" as an alternative to the proposed Murray Full Employment Bill.

Speaking for NAM's 14,000 members, who employ four out of five of all the manufacturing wage-earners of the United States, Mr. Mosher endorsed the objective of the committee hearings but questioned the practical operation of the proposed national production and employment budget.

The manufacturer declared that there are only three economic developments which, singly or in combination, have been responsible for depressions in America:

1. Mismanagement of the money and credit system in ways which convert prosperity into an inflationary boom. 2. Granting or perpetuating special privileges which prevent the flow of goods and services. 3. Preventing an adequate flow of capital into job-making activity.

"In the money and credit field," Mr. Mosher contended, "there is no man or group of men alive today who can sit down and spell out an exact method by which that money and credit system must be managed."

He recommended that Congress create a special committee of experts, "commissioned to report specifically on what legislative changes are needed and what policies must be followed by the banking authorities"; that Congress adopt "as a national policy the leimination of all special favors and all special privileges"; more vigorous enforcement of the anti-trust laws; a progressive but gradual reduction in tariffs; international agreements to eliminate cartels, a general overhauling of the national labor policy, and the development of an agricultural program, by farm leaders, "which will assure that farming will be restored as a free, self-supporting, profitable division of our economic system".

Preserving the adequate flow of private capital, Mr. Mosher said, requires a major revision in our tax laws and general governmental policies which will promote confidence among investors.

Nothing We Can Do Now Can Change That

Isn't there a grave danger that the greatest tragedy of all times is about to be written so as to read like slapstick comedy? Pearl Harbor was unquestionably a black page in the history of mankind. The facts that made Pearl Harbor possible are certainly more factual than the uncertain stories which are being dished out for our consumption.

The Pearl Harbor affair is over. Nothing that we could now do could change that. Furthermore, if the Pearl Harbor event had been avoided, we still would have had war with Japan, but many million lives would have been spared, the Philippines probably would not have been forced to bear the same amount of suffering, and the whole war would probably have been shorter if that sneak attack had not been possible.

We, therefore, in thinking over the Pearl Harbor tragedy, should not think of it as the cause of the war, but only as a terrible mistake, or mistakes, which caused unnecessary losses, suffering and a prolonging of the war.

We, of course, must gain by our mistakes permitted at Pearl Harbor and fortify ourselves against any possible recurrence of a similar nature at any time. We must make whatever corrections as are needed in our military and civil affairs so that more direct controls can be exercised over a more enlightened Army and Navy.

We can gain very little now by trying to find escape goats for the Pearl Harbor affair when so many people even in the highest places in the land shared the guilt. Even our Commander-in-Chief, who shared the glory of each and every successful military achievement, could not, if he were living, refuse to take some of the blame of Pearl Harbor, for as Commander-in-Chief he was in charge of all military affairs the day before Pearl Harbor just as he was the days when we achieved signal victories.

It is our thought, therefore, that we should devote our time, energy and attention to studying the Pearl Harbor affair not with the idea of crucifying any American citizens either in the Army, Navy or civilian life unless some of them were actual traitors, but in discovering weaknesses in our past set-up so as to make them 100% impossible in the future.

It is to be hoped that Pearl Harbor will not be permitted to become a political football.

It's YOUR business!

By Carl L. Biemiller

When masses demand for merchandise gets holding hands with mass purchasing power, that bouncing baby, prosperity, soon sits on the lap of a pleased public. Such a marriage is about to come off in the United States unless some witless uncle picks up the bludgeon of deficit financing to prevent.

Volume of purchasing power in the public's hands has been increasing rapidly since the outbreak of war. Expansion has been vivid in both amount of money in circulation and volume of bank deposits. Money in circulation amounted to some $7.5 billion in 1939. By the end of 1944 total volume had increased of 127 per cent since 1941, the year of the Japs' fatal error at Pearl Harbor.

Deposits and Bonds

Despite this increase in circulating money, it is small compared to what happened to bank deposits. From the end of 1939 to December, 1941, these deposits rose from $58.3 billion to $70.8 billion and this did not include deposits which banks themselves place in other banks. In December, 1944, they had reached $129 billion.

While money in circulation and bank deposits were rising, our people reached into patriotic pockets for war bonds. There was a volume of $40.4 billion of these bonds outstanding for redemption at the end of 1944.

Demand for goods is a story by itself. In an all-encompassing nutshell it can be phrased: "We want!" Start with $15 billion worth of housing a year. Check the new cars, refrigerators, radios, gadgets, clothes. This nation "wants," and in boxcar figures.

Purchasing power and demand make a lovely couple. And they make prosperity unless uncle is so resigned to perpetual depression he can't turn a free and powerful economy out into the springtime of peace to build an enduring home.

Economics--

Want to talk about economics? Maybe you picture long haired professors and intricate government bureaus when you see that word. Of course economics is an intricate science and of course we need some of those experts in colleges and government. But for most of us economics should be fairly simple.

It is like this, if you have extra money you invest it in a business; your own or one that belongs partly to someone else. You probably accumulated that money by working for someone else as most of us do. While working for your employer you produced an article or helped to produce an article. The people you worked for sold that article to other people who wanted it. With the money they received for it your employer paid you and his other employees, paid his rent, taxes, and interest. He also bought more material to make more articles for sale; and kept up his machinery, buildings, grounds, and so forth.

You spent part of your wages for articles which other people made, thereby helping to give jobs to those others. Now, if you have saved enough, you may go into business yourself and possibly employ others.

By earning money and buying the things we want we help provide jobs for others while we are getting the things we want. The more we earn, the more we have to spend. The more we can spend or invest, the more prosperous will be the good old U. S. A.

So you see, its really simple. By helping ourselves we help our whole country. Let's do it.

Maintenance 4c, Retirement 1c, Debt Service 9c. The latter amount is variable and will terminate in its entirety within a period of approximately ten years. Recently the levy has ranged in amount from 5c to 9c. The Mill Owners, although they are not residents of the district, and will not be privileged to vote, have indicated a willingness to assume their part of the tax.

It should be understood that action upon the school district limits will in no way affect municipal voting districts, public utility services, or other municipal relationships. The school district and the municipality of Greensboro are separate and distinct corporations and agencies.

The Board of Education and school officials of the Greater Greensboro School District feel that the consolidation would be desirable for all parties affected. They welcome the people of Proximity, Ceasar Cone, and Edgeviile to the Greater Greensboro School District; however, it is a matter that is entirely in the hands of the residents of the area. The way has been opened. Under the law the qualified voters must take the necessary steps.

A customer walked into a shoe store which had been sorely hit by the draft, so sorely in fact that the proprietor had been forced to hire some pretty green clerks. Anyway, the customer asked the young clerk to see some alligator shoes.

"Yes, sir," beamed the youth. "And what size shoes does your alligator wear?"

In New Guinea a corporal saw a native near a cocoanut tree. Pulling out a florin (32 cents) he said, "You climb tree. I give you this." The native grinned and pulling out an English half-pound note said, "This is worth $1.60. Let's see you climb it."

At a Naval training center a pharmacist's mate was preparing to fingerprint a recruit.

"Wash your hands," he instructed.

"Both of them?" asked the sailor-to-be.

The pharmacist's mate hesitated. "No," he said grimly, "just one. I want to see how you do it."

He had been holding the receiver of the telephone to his ear for a long time without saying a word, and so his friend asked, "Can't you get your number? You've been waiting there for ten minutes."

"Oh yes; I got my number," he responded; "I'm talking to my wife."

A family with a summer cottage in a wild region in Wisconsin bought blueberries from an Indian for several years at 50 cents per pail. This year he upped the price to $1.00.

"Why?" asked the vacationist. The Indian replied: "Big war some place."

Mosquitoes Flee Rooms Where DDT Paint Used

SPORTS 'n STUFF
TOMMY WARD

The softball tournament got off to a fine start Monday afternoon with three of the winning teams advancing one round. This is a double elimination tournament; when a team loses two games it is eliminated from further competition. The six teams entered are: Proximity Office, Woody Carruthers, manager; Proximity Overseers and Second Hands, Raymond Kincaid, manager; Proximity Beamers, Harley Boone, manager; Revolution Office, Ventry Hinshaw, manager; Revolution Weavers, Everett Hinson, manager, and Revolution Juniors, Mack Fulp, manager.

Proximity Beamers topped the Revolution Weavers 8 to 7 in the first game at Cone Park. The second game at Cone Park was a see-saw battle between Proximity Office and Proximity Overseers, lead changing several times. Overseers finally edged the "penpushers" out 5 to 4. At Central field, Revolution Office trounched the Revolution Juniors in a one-sided affair, 18 to 2. There is still plenty of fight in these youngsters and they will cause the other teams a lot of worry before this tournament ends.

Ex-Battleship Wyoming

The ex-Battleship U. S. S. Wyoming, second oldest battleship keel in service in the United States Navy has used more anti-aircraft ammunition than any other ship in World War II —but she has never fired a shot at the enemy nor left the safety of Chesapeake Bay for more than three years. Since March 1942, more than 35,000 officers and men of the Fleet have received anti-aircraft training aboard her. More than 1,700,000 rounds of ammunition have been expended thru her seven different kinds of anti-aircraft guns. All of this training has been accomplished without a single personnel casualty.

No Profit On Atomic Bomb

Atomic bomb plants for the government were built by American industry without profit, and with the agreement that the government must retain patent rights on the revolutionary explosive.

E. I. du Pont de Nemours threw its resources into the race to develop an atomic bomb despite the fact that the experiment was foreign to the company's experience and a drain on already burdened personnel, Walter S. Carpenter, Jr., president, recently told stockholders.

The du Pont contract, Mr. Carpenter declares, established a fixed fee of one dollar, with the government agreeing to pay all costs by direct reimbursement or through allowances.
